

A Terrified Natural Disaster

Yesterday, when I woke up, it was raining cats and dogs. I felt so worried and wondered if I needed to go to school on foot in such bad weather condition. However, as I was almost late for school, I had no time to hesitate or check the weather report. Instead, I left home in a rush.

On my way to school, I heard a loud sound 'BAM'! I was scared and turned back to see what had happened. Then I walked towards the hillside where the sound came from.

Oh! I really couldn't believe my eyes because there was a serious accident in front of me. A man was trapped in a car which was covered in mud because of a landslide. The man shouted, 'Help!' As soon as I could, I gave him a hand by calling the police. Then I tried to calm him down. After a while, the rescue team came and helped the man get rid of the mud. Fortunately, the man was saved without getting injured. He thanked us for all our help.

Although the accident was over, I was in a trouble as I found myself late for school. When I arrived at school, to my surprise, a security guard said, 'Why do you come to school? Typhoon Signal No. 8 is hoisted so everyone should stay at home. You'd better go back home as soon as possible!' My face turned red at once as I felt so embarrassed and shocked. What a big misunderstanding!

I learn from this incident that if there is heavy rain, I have to watch the weather report on TV before going out. On the other hand, I am so glad that I could help someone in need in such an 'adventure'.
